CONFERRING OF DEGREES
FACULTY OF ARTS

Presented by the Dean of the Faculty of Arts, Professor K. W. Robinson

ALFRED FRANCIS XAVIER HERBERT

Presented for the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters

Mr. Chancellor,

Alfred Francis Xavier Herbert can justly be described as one of the major forces in Twentieth Century Australian literature. A Western Australian by birth, he has travelled the length and breadth of the country, pursuing a variety of occupations ranging from pharmacist to swagman.

The experiences gained from his travels became the basis for his first major piece of writing, Capricornia, which was published in 1938. This large, powerful work was the Sesquicentenary Prize Novel in 1938, and was awarded the Australian Literature Society's Medal in 1939. Capricornia stands as the first major artistic attempt to depict the collision between the white and the Aboriginal civilizations, and its aftermath. Over the years it has come to occupy an important position in Australian literature.

Mr. Herbert has since written three novels, a collection of short stories, an autobiography which — using a phrase applied to him by his father — he titled Disturbing Element, and a variety of articles and short stories for various literary magazines. His second novel, Seven Emus (published in 1959) was a conscious attempt to depart from the style of Capricornia and create a new way of telling a story. Seven Emus is a deeply-felt and moving novel which presents both the white man’s and the aboriginal qualities and way of life.

Mr. Herbert’s third novel, Soldiers’ Women (published in 1961), attained world-wide popularity. In this story of accelerating power the author uses a war-time situation of reckless pleasure-seeking to expound his long-cherished views of women’s sexuality.

To use his own words, Mr. Herbert’s career has been one of “continual experimentation”, and the crowning result of his endeavours is his latest composition, Poor Fellow My Country, a work of epic proportions which has already been described as one of the great Australian novels. Here he returns, but with deeper insight and greater artistic maturity, to the stance towards racial relations he had adopted in Capricornia. Poor Fellow My Country represents the summation of Mr. Herbert’s artistic career, and it would be true to say that it stands unequalled in Australian literature, both in its scope and in its breadth of artistic vision. It shows Mr. Herbert to be not only a novelist, but also an anthropologist and a social historian vitally aware of the crisis in Australian society.

Perhaps the most pervasive attribute of Mr. Herbert’s work is his uncompromising adherence to the truth as he sees it. It is a quality which stems from his equally uncompromising love of his country, and his determination that the national consciousness be awakened.

Mr. Chancellor, it is with great pleasure that I present to you Alfred Francis Xavier Herbert for admission to the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Letters.
